The Marketing and Creative industry throughout the UK has undergone significant changes over the past few years, with businesses taking a particular focus on their online and digital strategies and campaigns.. One notable trend has been the increasing importance of social media marketing. With the continuous rise of platforms like Instagram, TikTok, and YouTube, businesses are investing more heavily in their advertising strategies. According to a recent 2023 survey by leading social media scheduler Hootsuite, 64% of businesses in the UK use social media marketing and other digital marketing strategies as part of their annual campaigns, with 70% of those investing in paid social media advertising.

Another recognised trend within the Marketing and Creative industry has been the growing emphasis on personalisation and brand stories.. During the Covid-19 pandemic, customers were consuming content online more than ever before which forced businesses to become more personable in their messaging and create a more personal experience for their users. A 2023 survey conducted by Epsilon revealed that 80% of consumers are more likely to make a purchase when brands offer personalised experiences. As a result, there has been a growing demand for professionals with expertise in data analytics, user experience, machine learning, and strategy building.
